with which the negto is almost each savely employed.

With a sack slung sideways over his shoulder, he walks along in the furrow, searching with his eyes for the next ripened boll, while yet picking the contents of the last and using both hands alternately to gather it; then depositing it in the sack at his side.

The price paid is 175 cents per 100 pounds; and 150 pounds being the average amount he daily picks, it is evident he has to work very rapidly to make a fair day's pay.

In his eagerness to make a good day's picking, it is natural he should select the larger bolls, and many of the smaller ones are consequently entirely overlooked; and so he only any log one or he to healt them. larger folis, and many of the smaller ones are consequently entirely overlooked; and as he only makes one grab at a boil, those fulls which he misses in the hulls are also left behind; the amount of cotton thus lost is very large, in fact so great is this unavoidable waste, that it is calculated over 15% of the entire crop is lost, and last year more than one million bales are estimated as having Leen left behind in the fields in this way, a complete loss to the planters of over $3,0,00,000.

Owing to the difficulty in procuring necessary help during the picking season, the demand being beyond the supply, it happens that many planters have to let their crops stand, only o be ploughed into the ground again.

The picking is done Letween the months of September and Jaruary, and it takes from one to two millions of hands from fifty to sixty days to gather the crop.

This nine is making a good start this season and is bringing all the honors of the diamond to the end of the city that it halls from.

The engine was called out.

The directors of the West Washington have published a neat and attractive pamphlet containing the list of premiums and regulations of the annual fair which opers on Cherry-field Park during the closing week of September. In addition to the fact that the west Washington is the leading fair of the county and receives the largest aid from the State of either of its competitors, it maks the seventh in importance in the list of Maine fairs and is rivalled only by those of more populous centers whose those of more populous centers whose those of more populous centers whose the list of maine fairs and is rivalled only by those of more populous centers whose to more populous centers whose of more populous centers whose to more populous centers whose of more populous centers whose to more populous centers whose the control of the control of the control of the control of the sample of the surface of the control of

It is noticeable that the rafts of logs, which the steamer William Conners tows down river now-a-days, go, at a greater speed than the rafts of last summer did. The Conners is a strong boat and hands I er loads at a good rate, but the effect of the stronger current of spring in the river makes a difference that is plainly to be seen.
